to the

Princeton Early Keyboard Center

Princeton Early Keyboard Center is committed not only to providing learning opportunities and presenting artistic events related to Baroque keyboard music that are unsurpassed by any educational institution in the world, but also to making those opportunities readily available to anyone who wishes to take advantage of them.

This season's concert series, for example, is free. Rates for lessons, workshops, access to practice facilities, and so on, are kept reasonable: at or somewhat below averages for music instruction, in spite of the rarity and value of the antique and modern instruments that the Center maintains and makes available to students and interested colleagues. Everyone is welcome to participate in the work of PEKC, and it is vitally important to the Center that no one be unable to do so because of finances.

This is, of course, a challenge, and PEKC can use your help in continuing to be able to fulfill this mission. We take pride in our ability to make very efficient use of resources: money, time, and space. However, in particular the financial resources are always stretched. Any contribution, large or small, will be greatly appreciated and will be put to good use, both to support programs such as the recital series and to support the center's teaching work.
